TO VIOLET.
YEARS—eventful years have pass'd
Sweet sister, since I met thy smile;
I'm thinking now what change they've cast
Upon each other's form the while—
They girded days with them are flown—
A calmer light must fill thine eye;
Thy voice hath now an added tone;
The tresses fall more dark and free.
Yet, in my dreams of these and home—
A slight pale girl I ever see,
Whose smiles to her mild lips do come—
Like stars in heaven—tremblin'!
With thy young heart's tenderness
There ay was blent a troubled fear;
As if I knew all longness!

Mus! see its worship perch here!
And! our prayers I pour'd to heaven [riven
That time prove not to thee, how golden links are

And, oh Sister! I am chang'd—
You scarce would know the dreamy boy,
For all too far his step have rang'd
Through wildering ways of strife and Joy.

Oh! falcon-eyed Ambition's schemes—
The thrill that comes on mountaine wings,
Have left no love for quiet dreams,

And leard contempt for tame things!

And Pleasure to my youthful cheek

So many a hot, wild flush has won;

That to her fols I've grown now weak—

Somme nerve must still be passion-spun!

And if mid scenes all bravery—glow—

The night has found me proud and blest,

Stern, mournful things, that make Life's woe!

Have struck sad music from my breast!

And when at times, Thought leaves me calm—

And dim, sweet memories float by,

Oh! then I feel how chang'd I am—

Yet manliness forbids the sigh!

Dear Sater! on this heart of mine,

Weight—stain have come, since last I met that smile of thine!
